

Shin-wha Lee is Professor of Department of Political Science and International Relations, Korea University (PhD, University of Maryland, College Park), a UN Secretary-General(UNSG)'s Advisory Group member of Peacebuilding Fund (PBF), and Head of Research Committee, Seoul Forum for International Affairs.

Her previous professional positions include Post-Doctoral Fellow at Harvard University, a special advisor to the UNSG Kofi Annan's Rwandan Independent Inquiry, chair's advisor of East Asian Vision Group(EAVG), a Visiting (Teaching) Professor at School of International and Public Affairs (SIPA) and Department of Political Science, Columbia University, and Visiting Scholar at East Asian Studies Program, Princeton University. Also, she received Award of Excellence, the 4th Nakasone Yasuhiro Award, in 2008, and has served as Member, Board of Directors, Academic Council for the United Nations System (ACUNS) (2008-2011); Member of International Advisory Board, GR:EEN (Green Re-Ordering: Evolution through European Networks, Centre for the Study of Globalisation and Regionalisation), UK (2008-2013), and Member of International Advisory Board, Asia-Pacific Centre for the Responsibility to Protect, Australia (2008-present).

Her research focus is on multilateral and comprehensive approach to global security, humanitarian issues, UN peace operations, foreign policy of East Asia, and the East Asian security community. Her publication include South Korean Strategic Thought toward Asia, Normative and Educational Frameworks for the Promotion of Human Security in East-Asia, "Does Helmet Color Matter? Discrepancy in Korea's International Peace Operations," "The Responsibility to Protect (R2P) after Libya: Practical Implication for North Korea," "Balancing Peacekeeping and Humanitarian Responsibilities," "UN 'Security Role' and its Limits: Inequality and Inconsistency of Humanitarian Intervention in Africa," and "South Korea's Middle Power Multilateral Diplomacy: Optimistic and Pessimistic Views."